THERE is a new America.

Statisticians tell us that in the last twenty years small towns have grown faster, proportionately, than cities. In other words, they have shown a larger increase in population.

This has been due to two things.

First, more and more farm families have moved into town.

Second, due to lower production costs, manufacturers have moved their factories from cities to smaller places.

Hard surfaced roads have made it possible for small town people to get to the larger buying centers and, on the other hand, have made it possible for manufacturers to more rapidly and efficiently distribute their merchandise to the stores in the smaller towns.

More general distribution of electric power and other factors are rapidly bringing about a new America. It is an America in which the cities no longer dominate as the primary market for American goods.

Small town retailers have taken a new lease of life. Stores have been improved. Shelves have been brightened up. And the small town merchant today, according to 100 wholesalers whom we have interviewed, is as good and as alive a merchant as the city storekeeper.

The consumption of most lines of American merchandise directly follows population. The small town retailers of the country serve over half the population of the United States. It is a mighty important market and the small town dealer is a mighty important dealer for any manufacturer of nationally advertised goods.

The families are larger in small towns because here live two-thirds of all the children in the country.

It is in small towns where the percentage of home ownership is the highest and where the cliff-dwelling apartment habits have not as yet become prevalent.

It is in small towns where the greatest number of automobiles per family is located.

Naturally, since here is the greatest bulk of the population, it follows that here, in small towns, should also be the greatest number of retail dealers. Glance at the list pictured here. It shows that with the exception of that class of merchandise for which the average small town family goes to the city, that the sales possibilities of retail stores are far greater in small towns.

It is, therefore, not surprising that jobbers and wholesalers, as a rule, sell at least half, and in many cases much more than half of their merchandise to small town dealers, and are vitally interested in this market.

With the awakening and growth of the new America has come a new type of magazine, serving the interests of small town women. While the automobile, the radio, the talking movies, stylish clothes, electrified homes, and other material things, may flourish alike in the city and the independent town, it is nevertheless true that the tempo of the city cannot be transplanted or superimposed on town life. There are several differences in the modes of living and always the town will have different mental habits and environments than the city.

Because of this, one and three-quarter million women of the small towns read The Household Magazine. It is edited particularly and peculiarly for them by people who have made a life study of the reading habits of small town folks. Household is carefully atuned to all the chords of town life.

In so far as fiction is concerned, town people demand the best that can be secured. Household employs the best authors it is possible to secure in America—men and women whose names are famous as the writers of books—men and women who are writing for other important, wide-spread magazines. But these stories are bought and edited with the small town people in mind.

The best artists and illustrators in the country are painting the pictures which go into the pages of Household.

Children occupy a mighty important place in the small town scheme of life. The Household Magazine devotes page after page to them, their physical health, their mental health, their play, their work, and the molding of their young lives into useful citizens.

Women's clubs occupy a highly important place in the life of small town women. They are not bridge clubs, nor theatre clubs, but usually civic bodies concerning themselves with town improvement.

Household, recognizing this, makes its Women's Club feature a very important and integral part of its editorial policy.

Realizing that the average small town woman does not have the knowledge of her city cousin in the selection of that merchandise best suited to her needs, The Household Magazine has established a testing home called The Household Searchlight, in which the products of practically all national advertisers have been tested and approved. This highly important department acts as a guide to small town women in their buying.

The remodeling, renovating and modernizing of the home is another very important part of the small town woman's life. Household covers this subject from a practical as well as inspirational viewpoint, and has been a recognized leader in the modernizing movement.

These things and others tie the magazine into the actual lives of its small town readers in a way which no other magazine not specifically edited for them can hope to do. And along with the intense reader interest which is built up as a result of its editorial policy, goes hand in hand the intense reader interest in national advertising.

Even if other well-known magazines had a larger proportion of their circulation going into the new America, they could not have the hold on their audience that Household has. As a matter of fact, the leading general metropolitan magazines and the larger metropolitan women's magazines have a small proportion of their circulation in towns under 10,000.

The necessity for such a magazine as Household in any advertising campaign is clearly and forcefully illustrated by these charts showing its distribution by population centers and compared with it the distribution of an average leading woman's magazine and an average leading general metropolitan magazine. These two publications here picked are typical and vary little from the average.

Advertising in these publications, it can be rapidly seen, has little or no effect in the new America which comprises over half of the national market.

Advertising must sell people where they live.

It must sell them in their own home as they sit quietly reading through the pages of their favorite publications.

The Household Magazine is the quickest, surest and most effective way to reach new America.

It has the largest subscription circulation in America —1,775,000 subscribers. Therefore, it is read every month by more than 7,000,000 people, each and everyone of whom are consuming their share of nationally advertised merchandise.

Household is the dominant factor in influencing the lives of the people in this tremendous market.

Since 86% of the total circulation of Household is in towns of under 10,000, Household alone is read in practically one out of every four homes in Town America.

Over a long period of years Household has built up a circulation staff of between 5,000 and 6,000 saleswomen and salesmen—town people selected by its circulation department, after careful consideration, to represent the magazine in their own home town. They are citizens of intelligence and character. A majority of them are women who are members of one or more of the small town women's clubs. A majority of these subscriptions are obtained by these local workers.

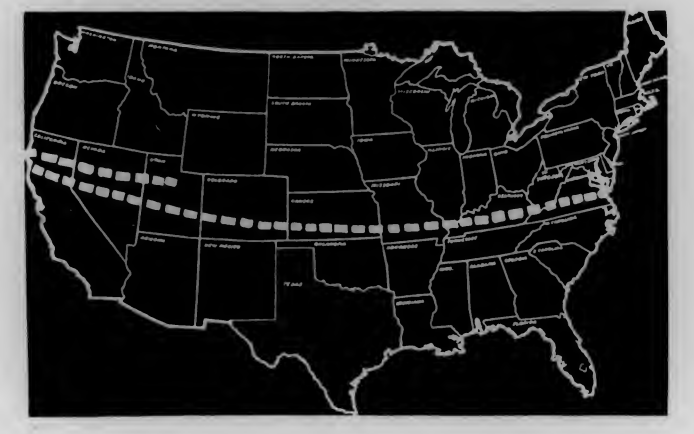
If we were to lay end to end the copies of Household actually delivered into the homes of readers in a single year, they would reach from the Atlantic to the Pacific and back as far as Salt Lake City.



Household is sold strictly on its merits, and its circulation has gradually and consistently increased over a long period of time without any forced methods. No premiums are used—no contests employed.

Since the saleswomen and salesmen are the better type of small town womanhood and manhood, they sell the magazine to their friends. The result is a better and higher type of reader than the average subscription solicitor would be likely to obtain.

With the borrowing and lending of magazines so prevalent in small town life, Household actually reaches better than one out of every four homes.

So that not only does Household go into better than 25% of the homes in small towns, but it goes into those homes that are occupied by the better class of family —the family that is a better prospect for national merchandise.

Larger national advertisers realize that there is in new America a tremendous sales potential and they realize that the best way to reach this market is through the columns of The Household Magazine. Here is a list of some national advertisers whose products are displayed on the pages of Household. More important names are being added, year by year.

Household is not satisfied just to carry the advertising of these products, but actively co-operates with these national advertisers to create sales to dealers.

For the past two years six pages of Household Magazine advertising has been run in trade papers which are read by 150,000 dealers scattered throughout the country. The magazine advertises itself in this way to help manufacturers and their salesmen sell the small town dealer on the value and the use of it in his own business. These advertisements carry a list of the products which are advertised in The Household Magazine and sold by the dealers taking this particular trade paper.

Household carries on an active mailing of the magazine itself, together with a series of letters and promotional mailings to 2,000 of the larger and more important jobbers throughout the country. They are informed of the advertising of the manufacturers as appearing in the magazine and of the help it can be to them in selling the small town dealer.

Household has also worked out a plan of mailings for advertisers using its columns, and marked copies of the magazine have been sent during 1930 to better than 65,000 small town merchants in various lines of business.

How To Use This Book

The Household Magazine has compiled here the number of subscribers in each county of the United States.

These figures show quickly just how many of every manufacturer's advertisements are going into the immediate trade territory of every jobber, distributor and dealer interested in small town sales.

This advertising is local advertising. It is being read by so many actual, living, breathing people in each one of these counties, and these people are either the customers or the very logical prospects of the store in this county carrying this manufacturer's products.

When it is remembered that each of these subscribers represents a better class family of at least four people, it can be readily figured what a powerful sales argument your advertising in The Household Magazine can be made.
